Session 1: Resolution regimes that work: the ongoing challenge of operational implementation	9:45

Despite significant progress since the adoption of the Key Attributes in 2011, the crisis management framework is not yet fully operational globally. The 2025 FSB Implementation Monitoring Review noted that important gaps remain in adopting resolution regimes and making them operational in G20 countries, while EMDEs face challenges in implementing frameworks that are tailored to local needs and conditions. This session will focus on core elements of implementation that are required to ensure that bail-in and transfer resolution strategies are executable and on the challenges for jurisdictions that are still designing and putting in place their frameworks.

Akylzhan Baimagambetov, Deputy Governor, National Bank of Kazakhstan (TBC)

Session 2: The deposit insurance–resolution interface: cooperation, coordination and crisis readiness	11:45

The 2025 revision of the IADI Core Principles stresses the importance of cooperation, coordination and information sharing arrangements between actors responsible for deposit insurance and resolution functions. This session will examine practical arrangements and frameworks that enable effective interaction across the resolution timeline and the use of deposit insurance funds in resolution while preserving the deposit insurer's primary mandate to protect insured depositors. The discussion will also consider how a faster and more digital operating environment, heightened cyber risk, shifting depositor behaviour and the growth of internet-only banks and new deposit-taking intermediaries raise the bar for cooperation and coordination.

Session 3: Resolution transfer tools: planning and testing	14:30

Although much of the international policy focus since the adoption of the FSB Key Attributes has been on bail-in, transfer powers remain an important component of the resolution toolkit. The 2023 banking turmoil showed that they can provide more options in a crisis. In 2025, the FSB published a Practices Paper on the Operationalisation of Transfer Tools highlighting member practices and case studies on their implementation. This session will discuss how authorities are incorporating transfers in their resolution planning and developing capabilities, internally and within firms, to execute resolution transfers effectively. It will also explore testing exercises undertaken by authorities on aspects such as separability, valuation and funding to ensure that transfers can be executed swiftly and effectively,

Session 4: Public backstop funding mechanisms for resolution 16:30

The 2023 banking turmoil highlighted the importance of credible public sector backstop funding mechanisms for use as a last resort to support resolution, provide meaningful short-term liquidity to a resolved bank and to help restore market confidence. Equally important is the operational preparedness of firms to access funding arrangements. Since 2023, the FSB has undertaken work on public backstop funding mechanisms to support authorities in implementing the existing FSB policies on funding in resolution. That work is complemented by a thematic peer review of backstop funding mechanisms, results of which will be reported to the G20 in 2026. This session will discuss the design features of effective backstop funding arrangements, the findings of the peer review, implementation challenges and practical ways to address them.

Session 5: Learning from cross-sectoral perspectives 09:30

In a highly interconnected financial system, crises are rarely confined to a single sector. The FSB Key Attributes apply to all financial institutions that could be systemic in failure. As well as banks, this includes insurers and financial market infrastructure (FMIs). This session will explore possible contagion between different types of financial institutions including the impact of a failure in one sector on the others and lessons each sector can learn from the others on resolution planning and developing execution capabilities. It will focus on practical aspects such as cross-sectoral coordination and information sharing arrangements, similarities and differences in resolution approaches to different types of financial institution and crisis preparedness.
